“ I remember the day he was born. I was a senior in high school. I was so excited all day because we were going to see him after school. As a toddler, he was my shadow at family gatherings and I'll always cherish those memories. Rest in peace, Adam.

I was visiting with mother one week. That evening we were going through old cards and letters and clearing things out of a drawer. Adam happened to come up, and came in to sit with us. I had laying on the table beside me a little card he had written to her when he was in kindergarten and a picture he had drawn, which was excellent for such a young child. He was amazed and we all enjoyed laughing over it. He asked grandmother, Boots, if he could have it and take it home with him. And she said yes, of course.
